Final curtain call for the Tweed Flood Appeal

The Tweed Mayoral Flood Appeal has wrapped up with a generous final donation from the Murwillumbah Theatre Company from its opening night performance of David Williamson's Travelling North.

"Community theatre is isn't just about acting," Dianne Robinson said.

"It's about life skills, self-confidence, public speaking and gaining technical skills that can launch so many different careers."

Council thanks all the individuals, organisations, businesses, clubs and schools from across Australia who together raised more than $350,000 for the Mayoral Flood Appeal.

The second round of assistance is currently being distributed.

Dirty flood water drained as pool reseal begins

The gradual process of emptying the 50m pool at Tweed Regional Aquatic Centre (TRAC) Murwillumbah was completed late last week, in preparation for resealing sections of the pool floor.

Water was drained slowly over a few days, to assist with cleaning, before contractors reline a centre strip of the pool floor later this week.

The pool will then be refilled with fresh water, ready for reopening in September when TRAC switches to its summer operating hours.

The 50-metre pool has been closed to the public since the March floods, which carried a large amount of sediment into the pool and damaged the filters.

TRAC Murwillumbah's indoor pools will all remain open to the public throughout the maintenance work on the 50-metre pool.

For updates about the maintenance work and further details of TRAC opening times and activities, visit <http://trac.tweed.nsw.gov.au>

Differing health reports for each end of river

Opposite ends of the Tweed River are at opposite ends of the river health spectrum, according to two recent water quality studies.

“Down towards the river mouth, the lower estuary is a healthy and well-functioning ecosystem and gets an ‘A’ for water quality compliance,” Council’s Waterways Program Leader, Tom Alletson, said.

“In contrast, the Rous River and creeks feeding the broadwaters have poorer water quality.”

Council commissioned the two water quality assessments as background studies for a new Tweed River Estuary Management Program.

Both examined compliance with aquatic ecosystem protection targets for the Tweed River and Terranora-Cobaki Broadwaters between 2012 and 2016.

“Water samples were collected monthly at approximately 30 sites, from the river mouth to Murwillumbah, up the Rous River to Kynnumboon, and from Boyd’s Bay up into the broadwaters,” Mr Alletson said.

“Water in the lower estuary is highly influenced by the ocean during daily tides, whereas the upper reaches of the estuary are more influenced by the quality of runoff from developed land.

“Unfortunately degradation of small streams in our upper catchment has a detrimental impact on water quality downstream.”

He said additional evaluations of the Tweed Estuary ecosystem would include assessments of seagrass and river side vegetation.

“This will complement last year’s survey of community values and uses of the river. Together, they will ensure a broad range of management actions can be devised and implemented through the new river management plan,” Mr Alletson said.

The Water Quality Assessment includes strategies to improve water quality in the Tweed River estuary over time, and increase public awareness of the issues.

Actions to be considered for inclusion in the management plan include:

- Working with floodplain land owners to improve the quality of water in agricultural drains
- Reducing the discharge of nutrients from the Murwillumbah Wastewater Treatment Plant into the Rous River
- Community education about high-risk times for swimming because of water quality
- Restricting stock access to river banks throughout the whole Tweed River catchment
- Revegetation of river banks, particularly in the Rous River

Collectors’ treat for mad film buffs at museum

Tweed Regional Museum’s Collectors Cabinet has been a stage for some fabulous private collections – and now that stage is filled with some Mad Props.

Museum Director Judy Kean said Mad Props, featuring HL Bear’s rare collection of movie props, continued the fascinating displays in the Collectors Cabinet and “is the perfect match for the Museum’s current Tweed on Film exhibition”.

“We’re delighted that HL Bear, a Native American artist and Tweed resident, has agreed to share his extraordinary collection with us. His work has featured in motion pictures, music videos, print media, fashion shows and fashion shoots,” Ms Kean said.

Inspired by his contacts in the film industry, HL has amassed an eclectic collection of replica movie props and has a special place in his heart for the Indiana Jones films.

The collection includes two actual props from Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade: The lapel pin worn by villain Walter Donovan, and the folding vintage goggles worn by Dr Elsa Schneider. Both pieces are included in the Collector’s Cabinet.

The exhibition also features replicas produced by prop makers whose work featured in the Indiana Jones films. A leather jacket made by Peter Botwright, costume designer for Indiana Jones: Raiders of the Lost Ark, is almost indistinguishable from the one in the film. An iconic brown felt fedora was created by the company who made several hats worn by Harrison Ford. A kangaroo hide whip was handmade by the late David Morgan, who made whips for the Indiana Jones movies, as well as Mask of Zorro and Batman Returns.

“As well as being an avid collector, HL Bear is also an extraordinary artist and craftsman in his own right,” Ms Kean said.

“He uses techniques and materials that reflect his Native American heritage to create museum-quality authentic Native American artefacts using traditional materials. We’re delighted to have a number of these props on display as well.

“Three extraordinary items – a Bear Society Warrior Shield, Warrior’s Lance and Blackfoot Warrior’s Bear Society knife – featured in the exhibition were all made by HL for the 1993 film Official Denial, starring Parker Stevenson, Dirk Benedict and Erin Gray.”

Mad Props is on display alongside Tweed on Film until 25 November at Tweed Regional Museum, Murwillumbah. For more information about both exhibitions and associated programs, visit museum.tweed.nsw.gov.au, email trm@tweed.nsw.gov.au or phone (02) 6670 2493.

Biochar conference

Some of Australasia’s leading experts on sustainable farming will gather in Murwillumbah next week, when the Tweed hosts the Australia New Zealand 2017 Biochar Conference for the first time.

Improvements in local farming, including initiatives of Council’s Sustainable Agriculture Program, will gain national attention when Murwillumbah’s Civic and Cultural Centre Auditorium hosts the conference on 10–11 August. Outdoor demonstrations and workshops will then be held at the Murwillumbah Show Grounds on 12 August.

While much of the conference will look at improving farming and food production by using biochar – a high-quality charcoal produced by burning organic material using minimal oxygen – the discussions on biochar’s potential will extend much further.

Speakers will include researchers on the use of biochars in manufacturing – in combination with technology such as 3D printers – including home construction.

Council is a gold sponsor of this year’s conference, which will bring together scientific experts, policy makers and primary producers to discuss the commercial and environmental benefits of biochar use in agriculture.

For more information about the conference and to register visit <https://anzbc.org.au/>

Reusable Boomerang Bags are now available at IGA Tweed Valley in Murwillumbah, thanks to the efforts of volunteer sewers and not-for-profit group Let’s Waste Less. The recent launch of the bags was timed to coincide with Plastic Free July. Boomerang Bags is a nationwide initiative to reduce plastic bag use by engaging local communities to sew ‘Boomerang Bags’ using recycled materials. These bags are available for shoppers who forget their own bags to borrow and bring back. At the launch were Council’s Waste Education Officer Tarra Martel (left) and Let’s Waste Less co-founder Andia Cally (right). Shoppers David and Jenny Kidd thought the bags were a great idea.

Protecting the Tweed's iconic giants

Paddock trees are an iconic part of the Australian landscape and bring many environmental and economic benefits.

Tweed residents are being invited to share what they love about their favourite paddock tree, as part of a Tweed Shire Council project with landholders to restore koala habitat.

Visit yoursaytweed.com.au/PaddockTrees and upload a photograph to the Storyboard of your favourite paddock tree on your property, along with a short description about why it means so much to you.

Council Project Officer Kim Stephan said studies had shown economic and environmental benefits from paddock trees and small patches of native trees in rural landscapes, including:

- Shelter for stock. Wind, heat and cold cause stress which can limit weight gains in cattle and impede dairy milk production.
- Habitat for many animals such as birds and koalas which use large, old trees for resting, feeding, protection from predators and stepping stones to larger patches of bush.
- Tree hollows, including dead trees, are used for resting and nesting by gliders and birds such as owls and glossy black cockatoos.
- Significantly reducing numbers of pest insects. These insects are eaten by birds, sugar gliders, lizards and bats that live in paddock trees.

Council is working with landholders to restore koala habitat through weed control and tree planting. Weeds such as camphor laurel, lantana, and devils fig are controlled to allow natural regeneration of native plants.

As part of the koala recovery program, Council is encouraging property owners to look after these old trees and plant koala trees where possible. Tree plantings range from single-tree plantings to clump and acreage plantings. Koalas have been seen feeding from these trees less than a year after planting. To be part of the program or to find out more, contact Council on (02) 6670 2419.

All contributions to the Paddock Trees Storyboard go into a random draw to win one of two copies of the book The Fragile Edge – a natural history of the Tweed Coast. Submit your photographs on yoursaytweed.com.au/PaddockTrees, email kstephan@tweed.nsw.gov.au or post them to Paddock Trees, Tweed Shire Council, PO Box 816, Murwillumbah NSW 2484.

Working together to protect threatened fauna at Fingal – a project update

Learn about a successful fox trapping program, to assist Fingal Head's beach nesting birds, when ecologist David Charley presents a free evening talk on Thursday 10 August.

Fingal residents and other community members are invited to attend the talk, being held at Fingal Head Public School from 5 to 6.30pm.

Mr Charley, from Wildsearch Environmental Services, will talk about the Working Together to Protect Threatened Fauna at Fingal program and how it is assisting beach-nesting birds such as Pied Oystercatchers, Beach Stone-curlews and Bush Stone-curlews.

These threatened birds are getting ready to breed and foxes are a major nest predator – taking eggs, chicks and even adults during the breeding season.

Light refreshments will be provided. Council's Project Officer Tanya Fountain on (02) 6670 2587 or email tfountain@tweed.nsw.gov.au
